ONE OF LIFE'S satisfactory mo ments came to me a couple of years ago when, dining at the Pitts-burgh Athletic club, I was told by

"You're from Arkansas -- let me tell you something: You got the two best senators in America. Pennsyl vania would like to swap with you.

He was speaking of John L. Mc Clellan and J. W. Fulbright, and the national recognition these men have won for themselves and their home state was a source of satisfaction to a newspaper editor who helped promote their campaigns for publie office .They speak differently at times, for each has his own approach to public problems-but they have consistently brought honor and renonwn to Arkansas in the United States Senate.

At the moment I am thinking about Bill Fulbright's statement yesterday in Washington, which the Associated Press reported in our news columns. Senator Fulbright as you know, is chairman of the senate subcommittee investigating the Reconstruction Finance corporation — an inquiry that has rocked America. Fulbright made some pointed observations yesterday on the public morality of Americans.

He said, in the words of the Associated Press, "Moral corruption beyond the reach of the law is eating away the foundations of Ameri can democracy." And he called for "a revival of the precepts of the Pilgrims and Founding Fathers. Thinking back on the disclosures of the RFC investigation Fulbright said - and these are direct quotes: 'Among so many influential people, morality has become identical with legality. It is a tragic plight if that is to be the measure of integ-

"What of the men outside government who suborn those inside it? They operate through lawyersmen who are known as elever law-yers: a eleverness which is like the instluct of the rat that knows how to get the bait without getting caught?"

"Morality has become identical with legality" — that is Fulbright's analysis in a single sentence.

Fulbright is a lawyer. This writer is a newspaper man. I am thinking of an example in which a nation's confusion of morality with "legality" has cost it that last refuge of the people's liberties — the freedom of the press.

Greatest of the South American republies is Argentina. Down there the president. Peron, has become a dictator. The other day his governmen seized by official decree the largest, most influential Spanishlanguage newspaper in the world -La Prensa, a paper comparable to the New York Times or the cago Tribune.

La Presna's only "crime" was to print the news — not editorial attacks. Did Peron say a certain railroad trouble had been Ironed out by the government and the trains had resumed running? Why, then, La Presna checked the railroad stations and found that the trains were not running. The government was Peron closed down La Prensa. It was all very "legal." But what did the common people of Argentina say about their beloved La Prensa? They were cynical. They said: La Presna is big and powerful.

We are too small to be noticed." Moral courage, that is, belongs only to the big and powerful-big nad powerful enough to be destroy-

Thus do men bury morality in "legality" when at long last they prepare to abandon their role of Commerce office and discussed the freemen and become slaves. For when a man, big or little, has no conviction he dares to call his own, but accepts "legality" and trusts to his smallness to keep him from destruction - he is no longer a man but a slave . . . and destruction will seek him out in the end.

He, the small man, was destroyed along with the big ones . . . in Germany , . . in Italy , . . and now in Argentina.

Pray God we shall not see it in our America.

DOROTHY DIX

No Housework

Dear Dorothy Dix: In a short time I am going to marry a very fine young man. I love him very much and I know that he loves me. Never in the world would I think of embar rassing him, but is terribly afraid that I might some day do so by askng him to do some domestic task at which he might be discovered ov others. On one occasion I handed my fiance a dishtowel and he was horror stricken and begged me never to do it when anyone was around. Is that such a disgrace? Dogs that make a man seem effemtnate? I do not expet to make my husband a housemaid, but I cannot see how a man would be degraded by helping his wife, I think t would be a lot more manty than ust standing around and letting her lo it alt. What do you think? ALVIRA.

Answer: I am with you heart and sout, Alvira, and I would be a trifle hesitant about marrying a man who shied away from a dish cloth the way your boy friend does. I would be afraid he would make one of the superior husbands who leave all of the hard household chores, like stoking the furnace, to the wife vho think it is all right for Mother to push the parambulator while Father twirls a cane when they take Junior out for a ride on Sunday and for a woman to pack home the groceries from a cash and carry store, but that it would be beneath a man to so demean himself.

His Idea Archaic

At any rate you can tell your roung man that his idea that there s something disgraceful in being! caught in the kitchen with a dish owel in his hand is as archaic as pegtop trousers and brass buttons and stocks, and has no place in this modern era when cooking has become a fad with men,

Considering that men get just as much pleasure and comfort out of the home as women do; considering that they are just as keen on a good dinner and as pernickety about the state of the bath room and raise a ruction if the floor hasn't been pro perly swept, there is no good reason why they shouldn't do their part toward belping to achieve the results they enjoy so much.
